Abstract This paper discusses the implications of the findings of the 1997 Survey of the Health of the Nation for the development of health care policy. The findings suggest that the health care system is in a state of crisis and that the government has a responsibility to ensure that the system is able to meet the needs of the population. The paper discusses the implications of the findings for the development of health care policy and the role of the government in ensuring that the system is able to meet the needs of the population.
